The attached provision on "arms control impact information and analysis" was included in the Foreign Relations Authorizations Act for Fiscal Year 1976. This bill has passed both Houses and consideration is being given within the Executive branch to a Presidential veto, largely because of this provision. One of the concerns which has been raised is that the "impact statement" required to be included in any request to the Congress for authorization or appropriations under paragraph 2 of section 36 might have to include related intelligence information. Unfortunately there is not any legislative history which describes what kind of impact statement the bill contemplates. In our view, an impact statement implies conclusionary remarks without related intelligence material. From your reading of this provision on its face do you think there is enough of a problem here to warrant recommending a Presidential veto of this measure from this Agency's point of view?
